For The Times' Children

THE FLOWER FAIRY.

NCE upon a time there lived two orphans in a little cottage near a small village. Ever since the death of their parents the children had suffered a great deal from poverty, for the boy was only twelve and could not earn much by his labor. The girl was ten, and managed to cook what little food they had and to keep the house clean. But their clothing was alnost gone by the time the spring came. The boy's name was Rupert and the girl was called Dorothy. Rupert worked hard, but he was selfish and did no consider that his sister needed food as much as himself. So, though both were poor, Rupert managed to get enough and did not take the trouble to notice whether Dorothy was needing food or One warm afternoon Dorothy was drawing water, when an old woman hobbled into the yard and fell fainting on the porch. In her hand was a pot in which grew a tiny green plant with bud just coming into bloom. Dorothy ran to the old woman and helped her to a chair; then gave her a cool drink. As soon as she was feeling
